SUPREME COURT TO DETERMINE FINE FOR VIOLATING TWENTY-EIGHT HOUR

of Stock Is Basis for Fine. Government Says Shipment Is Unit.

Washington, D. C., March 4 .- How seere a punishment congress has pro vided for railroads guilty of violating the socalled "Twenty-eight hour law" for punishing the unlawful confinement of livestock in transportation was the basis for a stubborn contest today before the supreme court of the United Counsel for the government ontend that the unit for fining railcads is the separate shipment, while the legal representatives of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad company insist that the unit is the train, no matter of how many separate shipments it is composed. Some features of the case resemble the $29,000,-600 Standard Oil case.

Railroads Contend Trainload | partment of justice, has directed the fight on behalf of the United States. In the brief of the railroad counsel, it is contended that the train is the factor of offences, because livestock is moved in trains. 'If there be a confinement in cars beyond 28 hours during transit under circumstances which constitute a violation of the statute, it must be the fault of the train," says the brief. "Congress has not said whether the offences shall be per head of stock, per shipment, per car load, or per train If congress had intended there should be a fine of $500, the maximum penalty for one offence for each head of stock delayed, or for each shipment delayed or for each car load delayed, it was easy to say so. in mind the rule of strict interpretation of penal statutes, the only reason able construction of the statute is that the detention of all stock on the same rain constitutes but one offence.

"Congress did not deem it necessary to be so severe as to permit a fine of $500 for each shipment in a trainload containing possibly 50 shipments, which a single fine of $500 would answer as

Rose Melville, as "Sis Hopkins," entertained a large audience at the El Paso theater last night and today's matinee. The play is an old one and is about as well knoown as "East Lynne" and "Rip Van Winkle," and like these plays, it always holds an American audience. It tells the stery of try to the other. She is just as refreshing in it today as she was the first time she ever appeared before the public. The audience laughs at her antics and sighs with her over her troubles, finally rejoicing with her when all ends well in the last act and as it always does in a rural drama.

From the awkward, ridiculous coun try girl to the polished boarding school graduate, with a final European polish, a big contrast and a far cry, but Miss Melville acts the part so that the transition is so gradual that it is perfectly, natural. Through it all she retains the quaint characteristic that has made millions laugh with and love "Sis Hopkins." She is a very clever little woman and really pretty when she wants to be, and is surrounded by a company that meets all the requirements and readily passes as capable.

Crawford was of that kind very common in great cities who affect to believe that all is fair in love, as they conceive it. To do him justice, however, he had not thought of his little companion save in an entirely disinterested way. He had considered her as a beautiful child, as a "wild rose," but the idea that the rose might be plucked had not even entered his mind, and when he had told her that he agreed with her sister that home was the best place for her he had really meant it. But the turn the conversation had taken had quickened his imagination, everted his ideas into another channel and opened his eyes to possibilities. Here was a girl shapely and unusually pretty, whose charms were enhanced by an innocence that was childlike as it was captivating, not to be found in any girl, however good, who had been brought into contact with the experience of the city school or workshop. "You might not like it," he said, rising to help her fold the tablecloth. "Not like New York!" she ejaculated, astonished at the notion. "The idea!

Why, even Patsy, who loves the country, says New York's the one best "It's a pretty good little town," he agreed, folding her hands in the cloth and gazing straight into her eyes. "Yet I haven't enjoyed myself so much in a long while as I have this morning." The girl averted her gaze and blushed, and he relaxed his clasp.

"Did you see all the horses?" she asked, not comprehending the meaning he had essayed to put into the "Which one did you like

"They are a fine string, but I think Lady Belle hit my eye."

"Isn't she a beauty? I love her!" she exclaimed enthusiastically. "But," she added, suddenly recollecting her trouble over the mare and becoming resentful, "she doesn't get any sugar from me this morning." "No? Why not?"

"Because she lost me $5 to the Shrimp."

"The Shrimp." "Yes; he's one of the stable boys."

"Oh! So you bet, then?" "I love to, but I shouldn't have told you that." "Why not?"

"It might hurt father in your eyes." "How 80?" "He thinks it dishonorable for any of us, he being a trainer, to put money on a horse. I don't know what he'd do If he found I'd disobeyed him again." "I won't tell him." he laughed.

"But the Shrimp will if I don't pay him. I don't know what I'm going to do," she said ruefully. "Let me lend it to you," he murmured. Nora turned away in great embarrassment.

"Oh, Mr. Crawford, I wasn't hinting! I couldn't taink of taking money from you. What would father say if he found it out?" "He needn't know. Why should he?"

he insisted. "But you're a stranger," she objected.

"A stranger! Don't say that. Why. I feel as though I had known you all my life! Besides, as I am to be Mallory's partner, I am going to be a friend of the family, you know." The girl reflected.

"Yes, of course. I suppose so, You're not quite a stranger," she said doubtfully. "You're sure it would be all right for a girl to borrow money from a gentleman?"

"Most certainly," he assured her. Nora still hesitated, but she wanted to take the money. "Of course I could pay you back-some time," she faltered. "That's all right," he said genially. "There's no hurry about it. I shan't need it for ever so long." And, going to his overcoat on the door, he drew from the inside pocket a roll of bills,

As he did so Mrs. O'Brien came down-Crawford thrust the money back into his pocket and pretended to be taking down his coat.

"Nora." said her mother, "I want ye to come upstairs an' dust"-She broke off short, seeing Crawford putting on his cont.

"Sure, Oi'm not meanin' to drive yes away, sor," she said. "It's proud Of'd be to introduce ye to Patsy." "Thank you," he responded cordially

"I shall be delighted. I'll be back in a little while."

Nora, following her mother upstairs. turned to look at him, and he cast a swift, meaning glance at her as he

"Wouldn't this frost you, though," she muttered, "me havin' to beat it all the way from the deepo an' then not a soul to offer me the welcome mitt?" She went to the foot of the stairs and lifted up her voice in a strident "Ooo-ho-ooo-ho!" Then she returned and seated herself wearily on a chair. Little excited cries in the regions above and a sound of hurrying feet followed this call. "'Tis Patsy! 'Tis Patsy! Hurry, Nora!" shrieked Mrs. O'Brien.

"Me darlin', me Patsy, 'tis glad Oi am to see yez. Ye're lookin' beautiful, choild," cried the old woman, hugging her to her and receiving in return a hug so strenuous in its expression of long pent up and hungry affection that it made her gasp.

The first effusions of the joy of meeting again having moderated, Patsy once more became aggrieved.

"Some one might 'a' met me," she complained, with tears in her voice. "It ain't no joke hot footin' it all this way with a heavy grip. Where's pop?" "Phwat! Wasn't there anny wan at the train? Didn't yez see Danny?" queried her mother, much surprised.

"Don't speak his name!" requested the girl as she divested berself of her short tan jacket and revealed her tall. slender figure clad in a white blouse shirt walst and black taffeta skirt, beneath which as she raised it slightly the flounce of a green petticoat was visible. "Didn't you get my wire sayin' I'd be here on the 7:06?"

"Yes, but it wasn't delivered here until half past 7," said Nora as she took her sister's hat, a fearful and wonderful creation in black chiffon.

"An' Danny rushed roight away with the rig for the train," added her "Half past 7! Wouldn't that scald you? I'm sorry I was so grouchy, but I'm so temperamental."

Patricia emphasized the last word with a very superior air as she adjusted her pompadour before the mirror and smoothed out her crumpled shirt waist with her fingers, Her notion as to what it meant was extremely hazy, but she had heard it in a play, and it sounded well.

Her mother was much impressed by

"Is that so?" she said sympathetically. "Poor dear! But Oi doan't wonder at ye feelin' upset. Sure 'twas a cold welcome yez had from yir loved wans."

"I had it all framed up." Patsy went on, "me descendin' from the caboose an' fallin' on everybody's neck. An' when I gets off the train the only neck in sight belongs to that village cutup that propels the hack. The worst of it was I'd been handin' it out all season to that bunch of frails in the company about my flance that owns a racin' stable and had told 'em I'd wired him to meet me. This open publicity places these medicines in a class all by themselves. Furthermore, it warrants physicians in prescribing them largely as they do in their worst cases. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a most potent alterative or blood-purifier, and tonic or invigorator and acts especially favorably in a curative way upon all the mucous lining surfaces, as of the nasal passages, throat, bronchial tubes, stomach and bowels, curing a large per cent. of catarrhal cases whether the disease affects the nasal passages, the throat, larynx, bronchia, stomach (as catarrhal dyspepsia), liver, bowels (as mucous diarrhea), or other organs. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription

Is advised for the cure of one class of diseases only-those peculiar weaknesses, derangements and irregularities peculiar to women. It is a powerful yet gently acting invigorating tonic and nervine.

For weak, worn-out, over-worked women-no matter what has caused the break-down, "Favorite Prescription" will be found most effective in building up the strength, regulating tre womanly functions, subduing pain and bringing about a healthy, vigorous condition of the whole system.

A book of particulars wraps each bottle giving the formulæ of both medicines and quoting what scores of eminent medical authors, whose works are consulted by physicians of all the schools of practice as guides in prescribing, say of each ingredient entering into these medicines.

Both medicines are non-alcoholic, non-secret, and contain no harmful habit-forming drugs, being composed of glyceric extracts of the roots of native, American, medicinal, forest plants. They are both sold by dealers in medicine. You can't afford to accept as a substitute for one of these medicines of known composition, any secret nostrum. Don't do it.
